

2degrees Announces New Supply Chain Hub for CDP Member Companies

July 8th 2015

2degrees, the global collaboration platform for sustainable business, has announced a joint venture with CDP, the international NGO formerly called Carbon Disclosure Project, to provide a new supply chain hub for member companies of CDP's supply chain program.

CDP's supply chain program, which numbers 75 members with a combined purchasing spend of over $2trillion, aims to help companies reduce emissions and promote corporate water stewardship in its supply chain. Members of CDP's supply chain program include the U.S. Government, Walmart, L'Oreal and Royal Philips. The 2degrees platform will enable CDP members to connect with other supply chain members in order to collaborate and share experiences, materials, best practice and challenges.

2degrees actively manages online collaboration programmes for the likes of ASDA, GSK, Kingfisher and RBS, enabling them to identify and unlock hidden opportunities and efficiencies in their supply chains and operations to deliver more sustainable business growth.

Dexter Galvin, Head of Supply Chain, CDP said, "CDP works with 75 of the largest purchasing organizations in the world to help them ensure that an effective carbon emissions and reductions strategy is made integral to their business. We have this large and influential audience but currently lack an efficient way of allowing them to interact and collaborate with one another. 2degrees helps businesses integrate sustainability into their working practice and particularly collaborative programs, so we are tremendously excited at the possibilities that exist for our members to solve their challenges together."

Martin Chilcott, Founder and Chief Executive of 2degrees, commented, "CDP traditionally has only been able to interact with their members via email or scheduled group calls. Through the creation of this partnership member companies will be able to move away from these traditional ways of operating to benefiting from a fully linked super-connected partnerships between companies."

Members will also be able to access the wider 2degrees community of over 47,000 professional members and seek insight from this audience on their sustainable business challenges.
